Trade Catalogue 2024

BRIXTON POTTERY AND THE SPONGEWARE REVIVAL

Brixton Pottery produces earthenware decorated using cut sponges dipped in ceramic colours, glazed and high fired until vitrified, so that the colours are locked under the glaze. The product can be used in microwaves, ovens and dishwashers without affecting the decoration in any way.

Between the Second World War and 1981, the technique of sponge decoration had largely been forgotten. In the Victorian era it was hugely popular with manufacturers, such as the Pollokshields pottery in Glasgow, as a way of producing cheap, decorative tableware using relatively unskilled labour. It was equally popular with the public, as affordable, gaily coloured pottery to brighten up the home.

Its gradual demise was the result of the increasing scarcity of suitable natural sponge, and the increasing dominance of surface transfer decoration.

The spongeware revival was pioneered in Brixton, when in 1980, Alex and Antony Dufort recognized that technically and aesthetically the moment had arrived for its re-introduction. Antony worked for the V & A ceramics department and had an encyclopaedic knowledge of all things ceramic, and Alex had the technical resources to adapt the modern materials and technology available.

The decorations developed by Brixton Pottery are classic and enduring. Most of their designs have remained in continuous production for three decades, and ECP Design are committed to their ongoing success.

About us:

An official distributor of
Brixton Pottery

ECP DESIGN is a leading homewares and ceramics design and distribution company relocated recently from Gloucester to Manchester, England. The company was established in 1977 on a rural farming estate in the Badminton area of the Cotswolds but we soon outgrew our farm buildings and moved to a large factory in South Gloucestershire in the mid-Eighties. Since then we have developed and distributed a vast range of over 1500 products including ceramics, homewares and gifts for the design-led gift market.
